I may have mentioned this before to you in passing. The 2008 Olympic swim trials were held in pools that took 2 weeks to construct from scratch. They are 50 meter ultra-low turbulence racing pre-fab pools but could be used by anyone and could be constructed. From what I gather they use for a short periods of time but could be installed for a much longer time period.

For the big 50 meter models discussed in the articles below it is stated they go for around $2 million but could be acquired for $1 million used.

Give me the space, and month or two, to get it installed any place in the USA. Alternatively, they could be easily configured and placed on a barge.
